Just two miles from York city centre, it pairs a proper championship test with a warm welcome for visitors.

A championship pedigree

Founded in 1906, Fulford moved to its present site south of York in 1935. The land was approved by five-time Open Champion James Braid and the course laid out by Major Charles MacKenzie, brother of Alister MacKenzie, architect of Augusta National and Cypress Point.

Fulford hosted the Benson & Hedges International Open from 1971 to 1989 and in 1976 staged the inaugural Women's British Open. In 2024 it was an R&A Regional Qualifying venue for the 152nd Open, and in 2025 National Club Golfer ranked it 79th in its Top 100s England.

> The Langer tree: in August 1981 Bernhard Langer climbed the ash beside the 17th green and played his third shot from its branches. The tree still stands, with a plaque, and every visitor is invited to take a photograph beneath it.

A recent five-year improvement plan under Martin Ebert (Turnberry, Royal Troon, Royal Portrush) has refined the course. Wild deer roam the heathland and the club has resident barn owls.
